

Have you every seen a large backpack as tall as the ceiling. Well, I have. Once I got to school early, and there was a huge backpack in the hallway. Suddenly it started to move. I walked over to it, and all of a sudden it slung one of its straps at me. I ran to the bathroom, and looked around, there was another one standing in the corner. After that I ran to my classroom, and there was another one. Every room had a backpack in the corner. Finally the principal got there. He told me there were hidden cameras everywhere. He said they were there incase a burgalar came, and they would scare him or her out of the school. After that the teachers came, and we had class.

This response reflects proficiency in narrative writing. The response is adequately organized and includes an introduction, transitional phrases to move the reader through the narrative, and a conclusion. Although the response would benefit from further development of key ideas, the writer displays adequate facility in language use. The few conventional errors do not impede communication.
